The First 'Rokeby Lecture'

Friday 28th November at 7.30pm

Armagh Public Library will host the first 'Rokeby Lecture' on the eve of Armagh's Georgian Day. Dr Sarah McCleave, Director of the Centre for Eighteenth Century Studies at Queen's University Belfast, will speak on the Georgian musical heritage of Armagh.

Sarah will begin her lecture with the social structures in place in the eighteenth century, and will consider musical developments in nineteenth-century Armagh, when St Patrick's Church of Ireland Cathedral and the Armagh Musical Society promoted repertory from the previous century.

A collection now housed in Armagh Public Library is a key part of this story, and examples from the collection will be on display.
